
tests.psychologieetserenite.com

COMPARATIVE REPORT — TESTS FOR TWO

Your comparative report

Built to Last: Is Your Relationship Made for the Future? — two profiles, one test, taken independently

Emma & Noah

July 22, 2026

Contents

01	Introduction	3
02	How to read this report	4
03	What your answers reveal	—
04	Overview	6
05	Dimension-by-dimension analysis	7
06	Readiness for change	8
07	Talking about it together	9
08	Disclaimer	10

Introduction

Emma and Noah each answered the same test independently, without seeing the other's answers. This report compares both sets of answers to reveal where your perceptions converge and where they differ.

No individual result is better or worse — this report doesn't measure who's right, but where your outlooks meet and where they diverge.

How to read this report

This report shows your compared global scores — without a question-by-question breakdown. Every gap is framed as a dynamic between the two of you, never as either person's fault.

This report compares two perceptions

This report compares two perceptions — neither is "the truth". There is simply yours and your partner's, and the gap between them is what's worth exploring together.

WHAT YOUR TWO ANSWERS REVEAL

What you couldn't have known about each other

21 pts — Relationship resilience

On your relationship resilience, Emma scores 88%, Noah scores 67%. This 21-point gap doesn't show up in an ordinary conversation — it's exactly the kind of mismatch that, left unspoken, feeds recurring tension neither of you can quite explain.

What this changes, concretely

Because Emma perceives your relationship resilience much more positively than Noah, one simple rule changes things: next time the topic comes up, each of you names your own felt score ("for me it's high" / "for me it's low") before discussing it. The gap becomes a topic — not an unspoken thing that keeps building up.

Overview

Overall convergence score

Vos perceptions sont très proches

Your two profiles

Emma (34 y/o, woman) & Noah (36 y/o, man)

Dimension-by-dimension analysis

For each dimension of the test, here is how your answers compare — and what this gap (or closeness) may mean for the two of you.

Conflict management

3 pts

On your conflict management, your answers converge clearly (a 3-point gap). This is a shared way of seeing things — a solid foundation to build on.

Relationship resilience

21 pts

On your relationship resilience, your answers diverge clearly (21 points) — this is exactly the kind of mismatch that, left unspoken, can feed recurring misunderstandings. This isn't proof of incompatibility: it's an invitation to talk about it, each of you holding a perception that is equally valid.

Mutual commitment

9 pts

On your mutual commitment, a nuance (9 points) separates your answers — subtle enough that it's unlikely to cause friction, but real. It's worth naming, if only to know each other better on this point.

Relationship satisfaction

5 pts

On your relationship satisfaction, your answers converge clearly (a 5-point gap). This is a shared way of seeing things — a solid foundation to build on.

Readiness for change

This score is personal to each respondent — it is never averaged or directly compared, since one person's readiness for change says nothing about the other's.

Emma

High readiness for change

Noah

Emerging readiness

Talking about it together

This report isn't a conclusion — it's a starting point. Here are a few prompts to open the conversation, without pressure and without trying to "win":

- What do you think explains the 21-point gap on your relationship resilience?
- On your mutual commitment, what had you never said out loud before this report?
- Beyond the gaps above, what surprised you in the other person's answers?

Disclaimer

This report was generated automatically from your answers to an online questionnaire. It draws on recognized psychological models but does not constitute a medical or psychological diagnosis, nor couples therapy. For support, consult a mental health professional or a couples therapist.

Developed by Psychologie et Sérénité.

© 2026 Psychologie et Sérénité — tests.psychologieetserenite.com